What has changed since Eric Garner's death?

Q&As. Key players discuss what has changed and what needs to be done.

Friday marks one year since Eric Garner, a black man, died on Staten Island after being put in a chokehold by a white police officer, who stopped him on suspicion of selling loose cigarettes.

A video of Garner's demise, shot by a bystander that showed Garner saying "I can't breathe" 11 times, sparked a national movement and calls for equal justice in communities of color.

Subsequent deaths of unarmed men followed, including Michael Brown in Ferguson and Walter Scott in South Carolina, followed by protests and a national dialogue on the value of black lives.

Seeking justice

Gwen Carr, Eric Garner's mother

What has been the greatest policy change since Eric Garner died?
Carr: Of course it was the executive order [appointing Eric Schneiderman as special prosecutor], because that was the biggest change we've gotten so far. We're looking for more. That's a temporary fix.

There have been massive protests in NYC and across the country in the wake of police shootings or killing unarmed men. How was New York different?
Carr: The protesters are sticking together, there's more awareness now. Before, people might have just looked the other way. They were united, and it spread all over the U.S., uniting people all over the world. In other states, they had riots, and there was a lot of confusion, but after New York set the tone, I think they followed our example, especially the Garner family.

What is the one change you or the people of New York are waiting for?
Carr: We're still waiting for justice, and that's our main concern. Until we get justice, we will not have peace. To me, justice looks like these officers, all of the ones that caused my son's death, that they stand accountable for their gross misconduct.

'People are frustrated'

Constance Malcolm, activist and mother of Ramarley Graham, who was shot and killed by police in 2012

What has been the greatest policy change since Eric Garner died?
Malcolm: We have the executive order, but every day you turn on the news, someone's still getting killed. Nobody's taken responsibility, nobody's gone to jail, done any time, getting fired. So I don't really see any change.

There have been massive protests in NYC and across the country in the wake of police shootings or killing unarmed men. How was New York different?
Malcolm: People are frustrated, some of the stuff that happened [in Ferguson], I don't agree with it, but you have to understand why people got to that reaction. New York is an example to the rest of the country because we never sat down and took anything. Younger people are really more involved now than they were before, and it's because they see their peers getting killed by police, and again, no accountability. You look at the elderly that fought for civil rights back in the day, and they changed it. They didn't stay home to wait for it to get done. They stayed in the street, and they were persistent. They thought, "If I could be in the street, and voice my opinion, I could make change.

What is the one change you or the people of New York are waiting for?
Malcolm: We are waiting to see an officer who commits a crime is actually charged with a crime. Because a lot of time they are charged with a civil rights violation, not manslaughter. They never get convicted on that. We have to turn to the Department of Justice for them to come in and investigate and bring up civil rights charges.

Community relations

Norman Siegel, civil rights attorney

What has been the greatest policy change since Eric Garner died?
Siegel: The Garner death has had a huge impact on the discussion about police-community relations. The body cameras on police was spearheaded by Garner's death. The use of video footage by residents became very clear that it changes the framework of the controversy. If Ramsey Orta wouldn't have taken video, we would not have seen what actually happened, and I think it opened not only New Yorkers but people throughout America what happens out on the street.

There have been massive protests in NYC and across the country in the wake of police shooting or killing unarmed men. How was New York different?
Siegel: Going to the streets, for many of us that's the only option we have, the safety valve for people to use the First Amendment. The demonstrations were different than Ferguson and they were peaceful, there was no violence or burning of stores, and I think to the credit of the protesters, they by and large took their anger and channeled it in a First Amendment, peaceful demonstration. The fact that it continues, there's a big demonstration on Saturday with thousands of people [expected] encourages me that people are not going to let this disappear.

What is the one change you or the people of New York are waiting for?
Siegel: A realistic retraining of police officers so they're out of their cars and walking the beat, trained to find out who is the bodega owner, who is in the barber shop, the park, to know people on a first-hand basis, to say good morning, to almost go back in time to when I was growing up in Brooklyn in the 1950s. This can't be a PR campaign, it has to be an effective retraining so officers are a part of the community.

The Oval opens for summer season

Summer fun. Eakins Oval will offer an array of activities.

For the third summer running, the former parking lot at Eakins Oval in front of the Art Museum will be reimagined as Philadelphia's "Park on the Parkway."

Opening on Thursday, the Oval will feature a new 25,000-square-foot mural by artists Jessie Unterhalter and Katey Truhn as well as numerous other attractions.

The ribbon-cutting of the Oval will take place at noon on Thursday.

The park will be open for six weeks as of Thursday, with activities offered every weekend.

According to the Fairmount Park Conservancy and Parks and Recreation, regular events will include:

Thursdays: live bluegrass music

Fridays: Happy Hour from 5 to 8 p.m.

Saturdays: Quizzo

Sundays: karaoke, hoop-dancing, face-painting for kids and BMW test-drives

Visit Theovalphl.org for the full schedule of events.

NJ Transit. Board approves 9 percent bus, train fare hike

The bigwigs at New Jersey Transit have voted for more pain — and no gain — for commuters who use their buses and trains.

The board of directors' vote hikes fares an average of 9 percent.

A one-way between Trenton and New York goes up $1.25 to $16.75, an 8 percent jump.

Monthly tickets for that trip zoom up by 9 percent, from $440 to $480.

The political finger-pointing is rampant.

The state's Democrats, who want Gov. Chris Christie to step aside as he runs for the Republican presidential nomination, fault him for not finding new funding sources for the $1.6 billion Transportation Trust Fund.

Republicans fault the ever-increasing cost of employee union benefits and pension payouts.

The last hikes were five years ago, when they jumped a whopping 22 percent; the hikes approved today would be in place by October.

Among the cuts are the elimination of two late-night train departures out of Hoboken, and the reduction of trips on several bus routes, mostly in southern New Jersey.

Also on Wednesday, President Obama appointed an emergency board to look at NJ Transit's looming labor dispute.

The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and Trainmen voted unanimously on July 8 to go on strike if Obama did not form the board.

The establishment of the board means that workers cannot go on strike for 120 days, and NJ Transit can not fire the workers during that period.

None of the 9,500 employees in NJ Transit's 17 unions have had a contract since last month — but only railroad workers are threatening a strike.

IT'S TIME TO MAKE #BLACKYOUTHMATTER

The Ernest Opinion

ERNEST OWENS

AWARD-WINNING MULTIMEDIA JOURNALIST

ERNEST OWENS IS A KEEN OBSERVER OF SOCIAL, LGBT AND RACE ISSUES IN PHILADELPHIA. FOLLOW HIM @MRERNESTOWENS

"Children are to be seen and not heard," is the paternal black mantra I heard in my childhood from many of my elders.

Today, many from my millennial generation have defied that ideal and taken their thoughts to social media. These acts have sparked a new wave of social activism and movements that brought the nation to its knees.

It was black youth who kept making the hashtag #BlackLivesMatter trend, with the global media following along. The number of youths on college campuses and in the streets protesting is increasing and diversifying.

To many of our older critics, we are too outlandish and lack direction, given our new ways of addressing the current political injustice and discrimination we face.

While visiting the NAACP Convention this past week in Philadelphia, despite the growing controversy surrounding the lack of public youth at the face of their advocacy for racial equality and justice, I noticed another problem. The models to which the NAACP and other prestigious diverse advocacy groups inspire their youth are outdated.

Protesters speak out in Philly after the Ferguson grand jury decision. / CHARLES MOSTOLLER

More than once in every keynote speech about the future were constant reminders of the founding fathers and sisters of the civil rights movement. This is not to say that these legends aren't worthy of mention, but what about those who are currently shaping our national dialogue?

When attending these events, you are greeted with veteran activists who bestow great wisdom and words to youth, but this often clashes with the current millennials' ability to mobilize with the now.

"What do you think the Twitter and the Instagram really gonna do?" an elder NAACP delegate asked me. "You should be out there in those streets marching like King and them did back in the day."

Many of us do protest, but that really isn't as effective when it doesn't produce a digital footprint that ensures media coverage and additional global perspectives.

Contrary to popular belief, social activist groups, such as the NAACP, don't have a youth-involvement issue given that they have one of the highest percentages of young adults in various internal branches of leadership. However, I do believe that such organizations lack the necessary audacity to visually and verbally include young people in the overall narrative of the current racial equality movement.

What we need right now is a generational acceptance of the way in which the world sees activism today in spite of how it was in yesteryear.

People can no longer march together in a group and sing "We Shall Overcome" in 2015 because the world we live in requires more strategy and nuance than that.

We need academics, scholars, clergy, politicians, Facebookers and Twitter users in this fight. And yes, black youth should be included at the forefront of that.

Two Pa. men arrested for bizarre animal crimes

Bestiality. Two men were arrested for sexually motivated incidents involving animals.

In the past week, two Pennsylvania man have been booked in bizarre animal cases.

Michael Crawford, 68, a Western Pennsylvania resident, was arrested Monday in Arizona after he traveled there to perform oral sex on a horse.

Undercover deputies from the Maricopa County Sheriff's office met Crawford with two miniature horses in a trailer.

After Crawford picked a horse for sex, he was arrested on bestiality charges. He confessed that he has traveled the country since the 1970s seeking horse owners who will allow him to have sex with the animals.

"Perversion has reached a new level," Maricopa County Sheriff Joe Arpaio said in a statement.

Meanwhile, just days before, a Lancaster County man was charged for an incident in which he was found nude and drunk in a hog barn in Millersville.

Larry William Henry, 65, told police who caught him after 10 p.m. on June 26 that he had drunk a six-pack of Hamm's beer, and said, "I just like pigs," according to reports.

It is not known if he was trying to have sex with the pigs, and why he was nude.

Henry was charged with trespassing, indecent exposure and public drunkeness, police said.

Hero mayor. Nutter throws self into fray with homeless man

Move over Frank Rizzo, Michael Nutter is eyeing your title as Philly's toughest mayor.

Nutter, perhaps still riding a wave of adrenaline from his epic mic drop after performing "Rapper's Delight" on July 4, intervened in a fight between a member of his security detail and a homeless man.

In the video, which was first obtained by Action News, the man appears to be trying to approach the mayor, but his way is blocked by a beefy bodyguard.

A wrestling match ensues, and the man, identified by 6ABC as George Creamer, gets on top of the bodyguard. Nutter walks over and pulls Creamer onto his back, giving the body guard the upper hand.

"My main role here was to really try to just calm him down and have him understand that no one's here to do anything to you; this is not about you," Nutter told Action News on Tuesday night.

It's unclear who said it, but as the tussle broke up, one of the participants can be heard saying, "We're good, we're good," a sign that the fight was essentially over.

Creamer told the station that he wanted to talk to the mayor about the plight of the homeless ahead of the World Meeting of Families.

The incident happened in the plaza of the Municipal Services Building, where the mayor was meeting with his staff about problem areas of Center City.

According to the Inquirer, the Parkway will be cleared briefly for security clearances ahead of the Pope's visit, but afterward everyone, including the homeless, will be allowed to reenter. DAN KELLEY

Greek protesters clash with police at march

Violence. Police responded with tear gas, sending hundreds of people fleeing in central Syntagma Square.

A protester is arrested by riot police following clashes in Athens, Greece. / GETTY IMAGES

Greek anti-establishment protesters threw stones and dozens of petrol bombs at police in front of parliament on Wednesday before a key vote on a bailout deal, in some of the most serious violence in more than two years.

Garbage cans and a vehicle belonging to a television crew were also set on fire. The clashes were brief, and calm largely returned to the square, with a few hundred protesters staying on under heavy police surveillance.

Earlier, thousands took to the streets of Athens in a series of otherwise peaceful marches during the day to protest against the new bailout deal that saved Greece from bankruptcy but will impose more reforms on a country already deep in crisis.

Once a common sight in protest marches in Greece, clashes with police had been very rare since the leftist Syriza party came to power in January. About 30 people were detained, a police source said.

Just before the clashes, protesters marched waving banners reading "Cancel the bailout!" and "No to the policies of the EU, the ECB and the IMF!"

This week. Top things to read in City Paper

By this point in the summer you've probably made the obvious trips to the water-ice stand, a friend's Shore cottage, Center City pop-up parks and down to the ballpark to watch the Phillies lose. It's time for something different! This week, join City Paper writers as they bounce around a trampoline park, play paparazzo at the White House, hammer the heck out of some sonorous rocks, swim au natural at New Jersey's only legal nude beach and try to puzzle their way out of a locked Center City room. Yes, that's right, it's time to turn daydreams into reality in City Paper's second annual Mid-Summer Escape issue.

Legislation under consideration in Harrisburg would require exotic dancers who work at strip clubs to file their names, birthdates and other personal information in a new sex-workers registry. Emily Guendelsberger reports that the lawmakers who are pushing the legislation say it would help curb sex trafficking, but the dancers who are affected by it are raising alarms about their civil liberties.

In a column, Jerry Iannelli says President Obama could have used his speech at the NAACP National Conference on Tuesday to speak bluntly about police brutality for the first time as president. Philadelphia, with its history of corrupt cops, would have been the perfect setting. Instead, he tiptoed around the subject, just like he always has.

In Music, Pat Rapa writes that West Chester pop-punk band Spraynard and ex-Philly folkie Meg Baird have both dropped new records we can't get enough of.

This week's edition of City Paper / CITY PAPER

Plus: Remembering Jack Nicholson and Black Sabbath at Live Aid.

In Food, South Philly Barbacoa, a street cart known for producing fabulous tacos for the last two years, has moved into a restaurant space on 11th Street, just south of Morris. Caroline Russock writes that the menu — using lamb as filling for the tacos — and the weekend-only hours remain the same.

Calif judge orders release of video of police shooting

Video. Officers fatally shot unarmed man in June 2013.

A screen grab from the video made public by U.S. District Judge Stephen Wilson / GARDENA POLICE DASHCAM VIDEO

A police video that shows Gardena, California, police officers fatally shooting an unarmed man in 2013 was released on Tuesday.

The officers mistook the fatally shot man, Ricardo Diaz-Zeferino, and others for robbery suspects. Diaz-Zeferino was out looking for his brother's stolen bicycle with two others in June 2013.

The video was published by the Los Angeles Times after a federal judge ordered the release.

The video shows a man taking his hat off and lowering his hands before being shot eight times. The second man, Eutiquio Acevedo Mendez, was hit once in the back and has recovered from his injuries, the LA Times reports.

The ruling to release the video comes as more police departments are equipping officers with body cameras.

The Gardena police chief released a statement late Tuesday describing the shooting as tragic while also continuing to oppose publicly releasing recordings for privacy reasons, the LA Times reports.

Five things you

1 Obama announces project for more broadband in public housing

President Barack Obama announced a pilot project to expand broadband access for people who live in public housing, his administration's latest push to narrow the "digital divide" between the rich and poor.

Working with mayors, Internet service providers and other companies and nonprofit organizations, the Department of Housing and Urban Development will make it cheaper and easier for more than 275,000 low-income households with almost 200,000 children to get home Internet, the White House said in a statement.

Private and public institutions have pledged to invest $70 million in the plan, including a $50,000 federal grant, HUD Secretary Julian Castro told reporters on a conference call.

The program will launch in 28 communities, mainly in large cities.

In Atlanta, Georgia; Durham, North Carolina; Kansas City, Missouri; and Nashville, Tennessee, Google will provide free Internet connections in some public housing areas.

In select markets, Sprint Corp. will offer free wireless broadband access to families with kids in public housing. In Seattle, CenturyLink Inc. will provide broadband service for public housing residents for $9.95 a month for the first year. REUTERS

2 US says computer hacking forum Darkode dismantled

U.S. authorities working with law enforcement officials abroad have shut down the Darkode online forum used by cybercriminals around the world and charged 12 people linked to the site, the U.S. Justice Department said on Wednesday.

U.S. Attorney David Hickton announced the charges in Pittsburgh, and called Darkode "a cyberhornet's nest of criminal hackers."

"Of the roughly 800 criminal Internet forums worldwide, Darkode represented one of the gravest threats to the integrity of data on computers in the United States," he said. REUTERS

Convicted sex offender charged in case of girls missing for 40 years

A convicted sex offender has been charged with the murder of two young Maryland sisters whose 1975 disappearance triggered one of the biggest police investigations in suburban Washington, D.C., history, authorities said.

Lloyd Lee Welch, a former drifter and carnival worker, has been the focus of the 40-year investigation for two years, Maryland and Virginia authorities said.

Katherine and Sheila Lyon, ages 10 and 12, disappeared on March 25, 1975, when they walked to a mall in Wheaton, Maryland, and were never seen again. REUTERS

FBI, DEA met Mexican agents over Guzman escape

U.S. officials met with agents of the Mexican attorney general's office to discuss the recent escape from prison by drug kingpin Joaquin "El Chapo" Guzman and coordinate efforts to recapture him, a Mexican government official said.

Representatives from the U.S. Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Drug Enforcement Administration met Mexican law enforcement officials in Mexico City on Monday to share information, the government official said, speaking on condition of anonymity. REUTERS

Apple launches latest iPod touch

Apple launched its latest iPod touch gadget at a time when the company is looking to popularize its new music service.

The new iPod features an 8-megapixel iSight camera and a FaceTime high-definition camera and also houses an Apple-designed A8 chip, which is used in the iPhone 6. It will give access to Apple Music and features a fitness-tracking M8 motion coprocessor.

The new iPod will go on sale today and cost $199 to $299. REUTERS

Pluto gets its close-up

NASA's New Horizons spacecraft passed by the ice-and-rock planetoid and its entourage of five moons. The event culminated an initiative to survey the solar system that the space agency embarked upon more than 50 years ago. "Pluto just had its first visitor," President Obama posted on Twitter. "Thanks NASA. It's a great day for discovery and American leadership."
About 13 hours after its closest approach to Pluto, the last major unexplored body in the solar system, New Horizons phoned home, signaling that it had survived its 31,000 miles per hour (49,000 km per hour) blitz through the Pluto system. REUTERS

Lilly gets serious in "Ant-Man" because "somebody has to."
MARVEL ENTERTAINMENT

Super woman

THE FUN STARTS HERE

With "Ant-Man," Evangeline Lilly becomes the newest member of the Marvel Working Moms Club.

NED EHRBAR
@Nedrick
ned.ehrbar@metro.us

Evangeline Lilly nearly walked away from acting completely after "Lost" ended. "I think I made it quite publicly known that I wasn't sure if I had a future as an actress, if I wanted to pursue it beyond the show," she says. But she's come to terms with the industry — which is good, because her "Ant-Man" role may keep her busy for a while.

With all the talk about strong female characters and needing more female superheroes, do you feel like, in a way, you get to be part of the future of that?
I would love to be. If Marvel presented me a platform that I could get up on and do that, that would be a very immense honor for me. I think it's fairly publicly known that I like to represent strong females and that it's important to me what I put out on the screen.

Have they talked to you at all about the future of your character and when or if she might show up again?
No, actually, they haven't. I'm still waiting to find out. There is this running joke within the company that all the Marvel women are always pregnant. [Laughs] Scarlett Johansson, Cobie Smulders, Zoe Saldana. Well, they all suddenly have job security! We're all suddenly in these multipicture deals, and we know there's another gig coming so we don't necessarily need to go out and look. I'm assuming and hoping that I'm going to get a call from Marvel sometime saying, "The movie was a hit; we want to make a sequel."

So the secret to being a successful working mom is having a deal with Marvel?
Exactly! [Laughs] That's all you need, and then you can sit back and relax.

And until that call?
I don't have plans right now in the acting world. I'm working on an adult novel series — or I'm trying to. We'll see if I accomplish that mission or not. I'm also working on the second "Squicker-wonkers" book. That's my big focus right now.

How do you view acting versus writing?
I think of this as my main gig, as in I'm a breadwinner for my family, and this is what brings home the bacon. But as far as where I really spend my time and passion, I've been doing about a film every two or three years since "Lost" ended, and between [those], all that time is being spent working on my writing.

Lilly (and her next baby) on the "Ant-Man" red carpet.
GETTY IMAGES

"Lost" coincided with the rise of TV recaps and online discussions, and you were a popular target. How did that affect you?

The whole thing was completely overwhelming, and I really didn't enjoy my job. I had a hard time adjusting to the kind of attention that our show got, the kind of attention that I got. Living so publicly, being so exposed all the time was really uncomfortable. My intention was, "I'll see out my contract, and then I am out. I can't do this." What's really great is that "Lost" did start this trend in TV where people do that about a lot of shows, and they get all that attention now. [Laughs]

'Ant-Man'

Director: Peyton Reed
Stars: Paul Rudd, Michael Douglas
Rating: PG-13

• • • • •

"Ant-Man" likes to put its superhero in very un-superhero-like settings.
MARVEL

The Marvel number "Ant-Man" ends with a rush — not the half-hearted but still silly coda or the obligatory semi-comprehensible post-credit scenes only nerds could understand. It's the climax — a dizzying, playful, joke-strewn dervish that finds the film truly, finally finding its own goofy voice. It arrives after a long, bloody battle to be more than a cookie-cutter Marvel entry, a fight so gory the production lost its original director, Edgar Wright, about a month before shooting commenced. Wright was too singular for what is now an assembly line that cranks out interlocking comic book movies with interchangeable iconic superheroes and interchangeable, decidedly non-iconic baddies.

You can see traces of Wright pop up here and there, like land mines, disrupting what would have likely been the company's least distinctive product, albeit based on a distinctive, oddball, deep-cut title. Paul Rudd is Scott Lang, the handsomest con there ever was, who gets out of prison — for a semi-noble deed, natch' — and soon finds himself in possession of a mysterious, retro-looking suit that allows him to shrink in size. He must stop another guy (Corey Stoll) who has a similar suit but will use it for nefarious purposes.

This is refreshingly simple for a Marvel plot. It's still a bumpy ride, a struggle to be personable while still conforming to corporate protocol. And so while Rudd gets to occasionally crack one of his usual self-aware line readings, he also has to spend some of the movie brooding. Scott is fighting to win visitation rights to his young daughter, which is a bit too heavy for a film about a dude who can bro down with ants. Still, eventually its fun-filled voice wins out, first in a scene where our nervous hero beats up a guy while offering a Guinness-level number of "Sorry!" exclamations, then during the giddy climax. If more of these included nods to the Wallace and Gromit short "The Wrong Trousers," then a future of endless Marvels wouldn't seem so grim. MP

Amy Schumer wrote a rom-com that doesn't totally hate women

Amy Schumer is anxious about committing to Bill Hader in "Trainwreck."
UNIVERSAL PICTURES

'Trainwreck'

Director: Judd Apatow
Stars: Amy Schumer, Bill Hader
Rating: R

"Trainwreck" is the story of a woman who tries settling down after eons playing the field. It is not the story of a slattern who tries settling down because she needs to correct her wicked, wicked ways. For her splashy movie vehicle debut, Amy Schumer quietly — well, with lots of hard-R sex jokes, some of them deployed by John Cena — dismantles if not the entirety of the rom-com genre then some of its more irksome parts — among those the notion that women should be punished for acting on their sex drive.

Schumer's Amy inevitably meets a nice guy (Bill Hader) she cares about, but at the same time she's reluctant to part with the fun of what has long been her lifestyle: drinking, toking, banging. It explores the unease of entering into any serious relationship, especially if that means parting with things one enjoys doing. "Trainwreck" isn't anywhere close to perfect, but Schumer is a generous comedian, regularly turning over her first big movie to Tilda Swinton and LeBron James, as LeBron James.

"Trainwreck" director Judd Apatow debunks the myth of PC culture.

NED EHRBAR
@Nedrick
ned.ehrbar@metro.us

Judd Apatow teamed up with "Trainwreck" star Amy Schumer because of her unique comedic style, but that's been getting her in hot water lately. So where does Apatow stand? He'd say everyone should calm down, if anyone were actually upset.

Amy has been under fire a lot lately for her comedy, and our culture seems to be very outrage-happy.

I think that people aren't any different now than they've ever been. It's just that the people who are concerned about such things have easier access to a platform to complain. Comedians should be able to make jokes about everything.

It does feel like we keep getting these 24-hour bursts of outrage, though.

I don't even think it's real. I don't think anyone is outraged. I think, like, one blogger in his basement is outraged and makes a lot of noise so that they can get noticed, but I don't think people care that much about jokes. Jokes don't affect the world. I just think they're interesting to write about.

Maybe it's just a Twitter feed illusion.

I just don't think there's a huge outrage about anything. It's just the equivalent of if every single letter to CBS when "All in the Family" aired was in the paper. It's just that there's a way for those people to get noticed now.

You're very active on Twitter yourself.

I have to say I probably enjoy it a little too much. I like talking to people; I enjoy stirring things up. It probably takes up more time than it should.

You're also working on "Love" for Netflix.

I guess you could call it a romantic comedy in slow motion. It's fun to write things knowing that people are going to consume it quickly. Some people think my movies are long, so it might be better for me to have a five-hour series to work on. [Laughs] You do have to think about the fact that they're probably going to watch two or three episodes at a time, minimum, and you want that experience to be fun.

Do you binge-watch yourself?

Not in the traditional sense. I can't do more than two at a time of anything, and there are some shows that I'll still take four or five years to watch.

What are your thoughts about people suggesting your movies are too long?

I mean, my movies are really only about 10 minutes longer than what other people might do. But then people will go home and watch 17 episodes of "Breaking Bad" in a row. So I think it has to do with the fact that people want to pee in the middle of a show, and if they can't pause, they get frustrated.

In his doc "Do I Sound Gay?" Richard Thorpe, center, anguishes over feeling annoyed by fellow effeminate homosexuals. IFC FILMS

'Do I Sound Gay?'

Director: David Thorpe
Genre: Documentary
Rating: NR

At first it sounds like a minor problem. David Thorpe, documentarian and star of "Do I Sound Gay?", worries that he sounds gay. He wants to sound "normal." Little of this, on the face of it, sounds like it could sustain 20 minutes, let alone almost 90. And yet give the idea of a "gay voice" more than a cursory thought and you can see why it makes for a fascinating cine-essay that, one that might even, at almost an hour and a half, seem too short.

What "Do I Sound Gay?" really is is a look at homosexuality (mostly the male variety) well into the 21st century. His plaint is a mere jumping-off point to a restless survey that bobs and weaves through a topic that, despite the relative tolerance of today, is still a complicated issue, built on a history that's even more checkered than we may think. It looks at the past, not only the bad stuff, but how homophobic audiences would gladly let Charles Nelson Reilly and Paul Lynde swish it up to millions over television. He contrasts this with those who conform, like Don Lemon and Anderson Cooper — those who try to sound, look and act normal, even as society offers homosexuality a big bear hug. Thorpe keeps piling on issues, allowing for questioning that begs for more questions, not falling back on easy solutions but keeping thought alive. It's more than a doc about being gay; it's a doc that preaches for intellectual rigor. Matt Prigge

Playing in a cover band

Musicians at Live From the Lot pay tribute to Led Zeppelin, Phish, Talking Heads and more.

SHAUN BRADY

Drummer Joe Russo and keyboardist Marco Benevento spent their middle school years playing Led Zeppelin covers in Russo's parents' basement, so it always seemed natural to throw a few Led Zep tunes into their set list when they played together as the Benevento/Russo Duo.

Grammy winner Dr. John headlines Live From the Lot on Sunday.
BRUCE WEBER

Their Zeppelin cover band, Bustle In Your Hedgerow — like its sibling band, the better-known Grateful Dead tribute Almost Dead — was formed literally as a party band.

"We did a whole set of Zeppelin, which we'd never done before, for our friend's birthday party," recalls Russo. For that occasion, the duo was joined by guitarist Scott Metzger. When they decided to play those tunes on more public stages, Metzger called in bassist Dave Dreiwitz to join. Prompted by his work with the Dead's Bob Weir and Phil Lesh in the band Furthur, Russo decided to tackle some Dead songs for another party joined by the Bustle lineup, along with American Babies guitarist Tom Hamilton, forming Almost Dead.

"None of these were ever intended to be a thing, but they've taken on their own lives," Russo says. "We don't put too much weight on either of these bands, so we have a couple weird cover bands that we never intended to be in but love."

Bustle will return to Philly for the first time in roughly a decade this weekend to perform at Live From the Lot, Ardmore Music Hall's first outdoor music festival. The daylong concert, headlined by New Orleans legend Dr. John, will take place right outside the venue's back door. A portion of the proceeds will go to the Ardmore Initiative, a nonprofit supporting local business and community efforts.

Also on the bill are Pink Talking Fish, a band that pays simultaneous homage to Pink Floyd, Talking Heads and Phish; and Hamilton's American Babies, meaning that all the members of Almost Dead will be on hand. At 9 p.m. the fest moves inside for an afterparty hosted by Benevento.

Guitar riff

Playing instrumental versions of Zeppelin tunes comes naturally, Russo insists. "If you ask somebody to sing 'Black Dog', they'll most likely sing the guitar riff. Zeppelin's so based in huge guitar riffs and drums that not a lot of thought goes into it. It really just feels like being a teenager in your basement playing Zeppelin tunes with your buddies."

Robin Williams (and Kathy Baker) enliven the so-so 'Boulevard'

Robin Williams gives street hustler Robert Aguire a ride in the actor's last released live action film, "Boulevard."

'Boulevard'

Director: Dito Montiel

"Boulevard" has more than a serious and genuinely touching Robin Williams performance going for it, one that would have been effective even without his death lurking over it. Like the recent Blythe Danner vehicle "I'll See You in My Dreams," it's a Sundance-y movie that quietly subverts expectations and goes to some truly unique places. It also not so quietly conforms to other expectations, especially once it's time to wrap things up. It's a frustrating mixed bag of a film, but one that does more good than not.

Williams, in full-on sad-eyes mode, plays Nolan, a longtime banker who's spent even longer in the closet, partly to avoid ruining his marriage of convenience to nice Joy (Kathy Baker). Bored, emotionally distant and tending to a dying father, he whimsically — and way, way too symbolically — turns off a street he's driven down a million times. He's rewarded with Leo, a young street hustler (Roberto Aguire). The two wind up back at a motel, but this doesn't become another tale of a tryst. It does, however, become another tale of someone helping out someone on the skids, and with a heaping helping of sexual tension.

What fares much better is his home life. Joy could be the poor, jilted, long-suffering, killjoy wife. Instead, as written and played by Baker, she's an intelligent woman whose marriage is, despite the lack of sexual sparks and the separate bedrooms, still a deep kind of love. The token scene around the end of the second act where the wife confronts her cheating husband instead becomes a hushed, patiently paced scene of them cradling each other on a bed, professing their deep affection amidst frank confessions.

This still resolves in an overly pat fashion — almost a parody of a sensitive coming-out movie, as if the script has been gathering dust since 1991. Still, as the last live action film Williams made — there's still a Simon Pegg film en route where he voices a dog, directed by Terry Jones — it's a reminder that so few of his serious films truly took him seriously.

Aries Don't be intimidated by what you think you can't do. With careful planning, you will advance. Precision and a positive attitude will take you far. Make celebration and romance your reward.

Taurus You won't get the recognition you deserve if you don't talk about your discoveries, accomplishments and plans for the future. Honesty coupled with a solid plan will lead to success.

Gemini Take the initiative, or you'll miss out on advancement. If you want something, you have to go after it. If you are proud of your accomplishments, you will be rewarded.

Cancer Unresolved personal problems will prey on your mind. Stop procrastinating and deal with matters in a timely manner so that you will be free to move on to more enjoyable pastimes.

Leo Generosity won't work if you are trying to buy love or friendship. If you pay your own way, you will discover that others will be content with your entertaining conversation.

Virgo Your dedication to a worthy cause will bring you acclaim. People you may not have met through regular channels will recognize your value and determination.

Libra Pay close attention to any changes going on around you. An unsettled personal or professional situation will work to your benefit if you don't hesitate to act.

Scorpio New horizons are opening up for you. Unfamiliar venues and new experiences will stimulate your creativity and inspire you to start something meaningful and exciting.

Sagittarius Your kindness will bring unexpected favors. Do what you do best and strive to make improvements that benefit everyone in order to gain respect and popularity.

Capricorn Keep an open mind. A spur-of-the-moment decision will bring new opportunities. If you trust your intuition when faced with an unforeseen choice, you will rise to the top.

Aquarius You can remain in control if you don't give in to pressure tactics. Others may have an alternate agenda. Make a professional change when the time is right for you.

Pisces Marketing your skills will be worth the effort. Networking with individuals who have relevant experience will give you insight as to how to move forward. EUGENIA LAST

Drink your greens

Even Philly has embraced the juice craze, from carrots to chlorophyll. RACHEL VIGODA

Sip-N-Glo Juicery
932 South St.
Whole Foods shoppers can hydrate for their grocery excursion across the street at Sip-N-Glo, which offers juices and smoothies ranging from sweet options such as the Heatwave — a special for July with watermelon, green tea, lime and mint — to the more adventurous Clean Green, with swiss chard, kale, dandelion greens, cucumber, chlorophyll and parsley.

Manakeesh Cafe and Bakery
4420 Walnut St.
If you can tear yourself away from the pastry counter packed with Lebanese treats, make your way to the Bliss Juices and Ice Cream section of this spacious restaurant/bakery/grocery store in West Philly for a lemonade with mint, a blended juice or a fruit smoothie made with or without dairy. The smoothies are just two bucks on Tuesdays.

P.S. & Co.
1706 Locust St.
This gluten-free, vegan, kosher cafe/juice bar goes beyond quick bites with cooking workshops and prepared organic meals. The cold-pressed juices are designed for the health-conscious, with blends such as the Ubud, a mix of lemon, apple, pineapple, ginger, cayenne and turmeric. Or go for a cold-pressed nut milk to complement a cookie sandwich (P.S. stands for Pure Sweets).

Yellow Juice Bar
2046 Sansom St.
In need of a quick citrus fix? Head to Yellow for a lemon-lime shot. The full-size drinks menu features simple sips, such as fresh-squeezed orange, carrot or grapefruit juice, and balanced fruit/vegetable blends. But you can also go heartier here: The Veggie Meal will fill you up with pineapple, kale, carrot, yogurt and peanut butter.

Four Seasons Juice Bar
51 N. 12th St.
Tucked inside Reading Terminal Market, Four Seasons offers freshly made fruit and veggie juices in a wide variety of combinations — or pick your own mix and add ginger or coconut for a flavor kick. If you're feeling indecisive, you can't go wrong with the carrot-cucumber-ginger juice.

Myanmar: The Golden Land

One of the least known and least developed countries in Southeast Asia, Myanmar has been taking its first steps toward long-overdue change. Now is the perfect time to visit.

Monks collecting alms

Myanmar — known as Burma until 1989 — is the most enigmatic country in Southeast Asia. Enfolded by jungle-clad hills, its central river valleys were for centuries the heartland of a classical civilization little known by the outside world. The democratic reforms that began following Aung San Suu Kyi's release from house arrest in 2010 are now slowly but steadily transforming the country, and the future is looking bright.

After 50 years in the economic doldrums, Myanmar remains locked in a kind of time warp. The former capital, Yangon (Rangoon), may be sprouting skyscrapers, but elsewhere horse carts outnumber cars. Walking the streets of Mandalay in the early morning, you'll see hundreds of monks queuing for alms and young women with fragrant thanaka paste smeared over their faces. Beautifully patterned batik sarongs are worn by nearly all women and most men. The everyday smells in the street can be just as strikingly unfamiliar, along with the wonderful flavors of Burmese cooking with its pungent mix of spices, seafood sauces, limes and fresh green leaves.

Myanmar has more world-class monuments than you could possibly see on a 28-day tourist visa, a wealth of vibrant arts and crafts traditions and, not least, inhabitants whose resilience, gentleness and hospitality impress every visitor.

Much of the country is now completely open to foreign tourists, although some areas (mainly in the east and far north) still require a permit to visit. Exploring Myanmar on a pre-organized tour is a convenient option, saving you the hassle of dealing with the country's rudimentary and antiquated transport infrastructure.

A typical 18-day package tour will take in the main highlights, usually featuring the "Big Four" (Yangon, Mandalay, Inle Lake and Bagan) with perhaps a side trip to Ngapali Beach or a night or two on a luxury cruiser down the majestic Irrawaddy River.

Five unmissable sights

Shwedagon Pagoda

This gigantic golden stupa is the supreme symbol of Burmese Buddhism and national pride.

Bagan

Around 2,200 ancient religious buildings are on the arid Plains of Bagan, one of Southeast Asia's greatest archaeological sites.

Mrauk U

This amazing lost city of ruins is hidden away in the remote west of the country.

Golden Rock Pagoda

Teetering on the rim of a cliff top in the coastal hills of Mon State, this extraordinary gilded boulder ranks among the country's most magical pilgrimage sites.

Inle Lake

"One-legged" Intha rowers, floating gardens, stilt villages, ancient Shan stupa complexes and beautiful scenery are just some of the attractions of this lake in the Shan Hills.

Cowboys signing

Dallas inks Bryant

Dez Bryant won't be holding out in training camp. The Cowboys and the wideout struck a deal Wednesday. According to Adam Schefter, he agreed to a five-year, $70 million contract with $40 million guaranteed, the same pact Demaryius Thomas made with Denver.

Is Spieth the next Tiger?

British Open. Tiger Woods looks to return to form while Jordan Spieth hopes to keep winning as third major kicks off.

Woods and Spieth will surely have huge galleries this week. / GETTY IMAGES

The Open Championship (known on this side of the pond as the British Open), kicks off in the wee hours of the morning Thursday here in the United States with the best players in the world, save for the injured Rory McIlroy, teeing off at the Olde Course at St. Andrews.

It's a venue that has seen two championships for Tiger Woods and one that could see red-hot Jordan Spieth win his third straight major in 2015.

In a light moment during a pretournament presser, Woods, a 14-time major champion, shook off suggestions that at 39 he should mull calling it a career.

"Well, retirement? I don't have any AARP card yet, so I'm a ways from that," Woods, who has returned to form after a solid showing at Greenbrier two weeks ago, said. "I'm still young. I'm not 40 yet. I know some of you guys think I'm buried and done, but I'm still right here in front of you."

If there is any golf course Woods can use to make a return to glory, it is St. Andrews. In 2000, he won his first British Open at a whopping 19 under par, a major championship record. In 2005, Woods won by five strokes to achieve a second career grand slam.

Spieth, just 22 years old, has won four times on tour this season, including the Masters and U.S. Open. And immediately, the Texan is being called the next Tiger Woods. He could get closer to history this week by going 3 for 3 in major tournaments this season.

"I think the parallels that are drawn between me and Tiger are unfair," Spieth told The Guardian on Wednesday. "I think that's something that people are looking for but is not there with anybody right now because it's something I don't think that can be compared until at least midway through their career."

Woods (25/1 odds) and Spieth (9/2) are clearly the most intriguing storylines, but it is Dustin Johnson (10/1) who will be feeling the most pressure, aside from perhaps the two aforementioned golfers.

Not only will the notorious long-hitter have to shake off the burden of having three-putted on the final green at last month's U.S. Open to lose the title to Spieth, he also will be tasked with playing alongside him Thursday and Friday.

Eagles 2014 draft class in review

NFL. As last year's prospects return as sophomores, we look to see how they measure up.

The Eagles' 2014 draft class was not a bright spot last year. As a group, they had one of the lowest snap count totals among teams in the NFL, and as individuals, only Jordan Matthews and Beau Allen impressed. Several picks struggled immensely just to get on the field.

With training camp looming, many second-year players are focusing on building on last year's foundation, while for others 2014 is an aberration to be placed firmly in the rearview mirror.

LUKE MILLER
@MetroPhilly
sports@metro.us

Will Josh Huff and Jordan Matthews emerge as top receiving threats in 2015? / GETTY IMAGES

1 Marcus Smith, LB, 1st round: Fair or not, this draft may ultimately be judged by the way Marcus Smith goes. For both the draft and Smith, year one wasn't promising. All the Eagles' talk about wanting to give rookies one role to learn wasn't reflected in their treatment of Smith, who was punted from position to position throughout the season, never with great success. August will be a big month for Smith. The opportunity is there with the departure of Trent Cole.

2 Jordan Matthews, WR, 2nd round: Matthews was the bright spot of the 2014 draft, and his success helped make up for Smith's lack of contribution. Matthews, however, was mostly limited to the slot last season, and had the benefit of working against defenses occupied with Jeremy Maclin's renaissance. He still rode those advantages to a club rookie record for touchdown catches. This year he will have to thrive outside the shadow of Maclin and become a leader in a very young receiving corps.

3 Josh Huff, WR, 3rd round: Huff is being counted on in the same way Matthews is this year. But he doesn't have quite the same rookie season to build on. It was a slow adjustment to the NFL for Huff in year one. He showed flashes of his ability with the ball in his hands, highlighted by his kick return touchdown. But too often he was plagued with drops or a key fumble, and it limited his ability to produce as he finished with just eight catches for 98 yards.

4 Jaylen Watkins, DB, 4th round: Watkins didn't see extensive playing time until the final game of the 2014 season. With all the turnover in the Eagles' secondary this offseason, the chance is there for Watkins to impress and make a job his own. It seems his best chance will come at safety, where he has been training along with Malcolm Jenkins and Walter Thurmond.

The rest of the rookies

5 Taylor Hart, DE, 5th round: Hart made the 53-man roster last season, but not much else, as he never took a snap. Like Smith, he reportedly dedicated the offseason to getting stronger, and the Eagles like what they see.

6 Ed Reynolds, S, 5th round: Reynolds didn't make the team in 2014. There hasn't been a lot of news this summer about him, and it will likely be an uphill battle to make the roster.

7 Beau Allen, DT, 7th round: Allen was the nicest surprise of the 2014 class. Allen established himself as an important part of the defensive line rotation behind Bennie Logan.

GAIN ADVANTAGE WITH ANALYTICS

There's a good chance zero members of your league are using advanced statistics when making fantasy football decisions. Heck, even real NFL teams are lagging way behind their NBA and MLB counterparts in analytics. Now is an excellent time to get ahead of the curve. We're not going to try to digest every little metric that's out there, mostly because we don't want the opposite sex to completely disown us. But there are a few stats out there that can really, really help:

Snap to attention

Tracking snap counts and offensive personnel groupings is so simple that it doesn't even deserve to be called a "metric." It's still amazing how often this is overlooked. Darren Sproles piled up 266 yards and two touchdowns in the first two weeks of last season, but he only played on 36.5 percent of the Eagles' offensive snaps. Those in the know sold him quickly. On the other side of the coin, Charles Johnson went from zero snaps in Weeks 1 through 4 to 25.8 percent in Week 8 and then up to 53.1 in Week 11. It was easy to see he was progressing toward a full-time role down the stretch and therefore worth an add.

DARREN SPROLES
GETTY IMAGES

Go short

It's fun to own guys who make plays deep down the field such as DeSean Jackson, Martavis Bryant and Vincent Jackson. It's not fun when these very volatile assets leave holes in your fantasy week. If you're in a PPR (point per reception) league, you need to realize there's a direct correlation between PFF's aDOT (average depth of target) metric and catch rate. Jarvis Landry, Julian Edelman, Golden Tate and Keenan Allen are examples of guys who see targets close to the line of scrimmage and therefore can be counted on for a high floor of weekly receptions.
